BOGUS CIGAR STAMPS.

Some Maysville Dealers Had to Pay the Internal Revenue Tax.

During the past few days several thousands of cigars bearing counterfeit Revenue stamps have been seized by officials in this city.

They were from factory No. 3,741, Ninth District Pennsylvania.

The local dealers promptly paid the amount of tax and genuine stamps were affixed.

Of course no blame attaches to the parties who held the cigars, as they were innocent purchasers.

NOT SETTLED YET.

They're Still After "Uncle Morg" and His Big Fat Job.

A Washington letter to The Courier Journal says there are no new developments in the Attorney General's office regarding the case of Solicitor of Internal Revenue Thomas.

Representative Pugh again saw the President, Attorney General and Commissioner of Internal Revenue, but with what result could not be learned.

There is no doubt that Judge Thomas has a big fight on his hands and if he pulls through he will be very lucky.

It is said that Senator Deboe has been telegraphed to come to Washington, but, contrary to the usual custom, has failed to grant Mr. Pugh's request.

MOCK—SHACKLEFORD.

Handsome Wedding at the Home of the Bride's Relatives in Clark County.

Mr. Joel Wallace Mock and Miss Ellen Leitch Shackelford were married Wednesday at noon at the home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. George Webster Winters, at Rensselaer, Clark county.

A band from Winchester furnished the music and the wedding was a beautiful one.

The bride wore a very becoming gown of white mousseline de soie and carried a big bunch of carnations. She is a daughter of the late James Shackelford and a very charming girl.

The groom is a rising young merchant of Millersburg and both young people have many warm friends.

The Maid of Honor was Miss Sallie Ball of this city and the best man was Mr. Layson Tarr of Millersburg.

An elegant luncheon was served and the bridal couple then departed for their home at Millersburg.

LETTER FROM ROME!

Father Ennis Writes Entertainingly From the Holy City.

POLITICAL UNREST IN ITALY.

ROME, May 20th, 1899.

Editor Maysville Ledger: At present the parliamentary situation in Italy is very much strained. Early in spring the Ministry presided over by General Pelloux contemplated the occupation of a small zone of Chinese territory to serve in the future as a sphere of influence in the partition of the Celestial Empire. The lay of San Sun became the objective point, and China was graciously asked to grant the modest request. There seems to be a deep-rooted conviction here that England, fearing the activity of France and Germany in the extreme Orient, advised Italy to appear on the field. This is looked upon as a second edition of the intrigues fabricated by the Cabinet of St. James some years ago resulting, under Crispi's administration, in the disastrous occupation of a few miles of African desert. When the plan was laid before Parliament it received the greatest opposition. The Government committed to this policy, unable to find a majority to strengthen it, resigned.

Strange to say, the same Minister, General Pelloux, formed another Cabinet last week, retaining many of his former colleagues. The National legislative body, divided in many groups respectively called Center, Left and Right, was again convoked on the 25th of May. At the very first session the bad humor of the members became evident. On the 26th Ferri, leader of the Left, made a violent speech against any proposal that was made for expansion. In the course of his remarks the fiery orator recounted the disasters of Africa, asserting that the soldiers had been led to death by Generals who cowardly fled in the moment of danger. These words produced a storm of protests; confusion followed, and the session was suspended.

On the following day promptly at 2:30 the Speaker, or as they call him here the President, called the House to order. The head of the Cabinet, General Pelloux, denounced the language of Ferri as an atrocious calumny against the Italian Army. This declaration was the signal for one of the most curious performances. Howls, cries, hisses and applause rent the air. The tumult increased by degrees. Members sitting at the Right wing marched over to the Left gesticulating furiously. Mutual recriminations were exchanged which could hardly be heard as they all shouted at the same time in the most approved fashion. From words it came to blows. That mass of humanity looked to an eye-witness as a forest of hands shaken by a Kansas cyclone. The contagion spread to the tribune reserved for the press, and many knights of the pen indulged in sundry personal encounters. The custom obtains here that when order cannot be restored, the Speaker of the House puts on his hat—a sign interpreted to suspend the session. The official covering of the head also means that the tribunes must be cleared. The Italians call galleries tribunes. The result was a short wait for the spectators in the adjoining corridors.

Comparative calm having been established the speaker indulged in a little lecture on parliamentary etiquette.

General Pelloux continued his speech praising the army. A majority applauded his sentiments, and amidst another discharge of vocal selections the Minister of War was directed to express the love of the legislative body to the brave defenders of the flag. The incident thus came to a close, and the House passed to the order of the day. The irrepressible Ferri took up again the thread of his speech just where he left off the day before. The actual Cabinet in general and its policy of expansion in particular were made the subject of his classic denunciations. It seems rather odd to hear in an Italian hall the words militarism, expansion and imperialism so often repeated—words that now burn on the lips of many Americans.

The champion of the Left reviewed the entire situation in that forcible Italian way teeming with rhetoric and accentuated by sweeping gestures. Why may we not suppose that Cæsar Gracchus spoke in a similar vein on the Roman Forum? According to his ideas Italy had enough to do at home without dreaming of foreign conquests. The social and economic conditions of the country should claim the undivided attention of the Government. Before undertaking the progress of expansion the base of operation must be made strong and capable of enduring the necessary stress. Nine billions of francs had been thrown away in the fatal effort to secure a foothold on African soil. England reaped the benefit of so much money and blood thus prodigally wasted. Pointing his finger to the Ministerial Bench Ferri ended by saying that unless the Cabinet abandoned the policy of expansion it was doomed to fall. Other speakers propounded the same sentiments. They asked General Pelloux to make known sincerely and openly his views on the subject. In answer to these interpolations the first Minister requested the House to remand to a future day the declaration of his Cabinet. The consent obtained, the House adjourned. At this writing it would be difficult to state with any degree of certainty what turn things may take in successive sessions. The common opinion seems to be that the Government is trying in a diplomatic manner to gain time in order to persuade China to grant the desired concessions. These concessions, supposed to be of a commercial and not of a military character, once attained from the Sick Man of the Orient, the question would be presented as an accomplished fact to the representatives of the Nation. In that case, and as it happened in a similar transaction in America, a ratification would be the natural consequence. It depends on what majority Pelloux will be able to command on his foreign policy whether the present Cabinet will remain in power. The conduct of the extreme Left has alienated the good will of many who were ready to vote with the opposition. The talismanic word of Imperialism, understood in the sense of expansion, fires the souls of a large contingent of public men. Crispi is their hero, and he, too, waves the flag on the "glory-crowned heights" of a more or less sincere patriotism. Italy has her phalanx of enthusiastic jingoes, against which a militant force is at work using weapons that are sharp and formidable. A coalition of different parties in Parliament may overthrow the present Ministry. Will the next one take another orientation, or follow the same policy? This line of action would cause a succession of Cabinets doomed to lead a short political life barren of permanent results. Such being the situation the acute stage in the crisis must soon be reached.
